During the same time period, available information indicates that an average of $424,408 were assessed against persons who were under the age of 18 at the time of offense but were tried in circuit courts for criminal cases. Between the two categories, an estimated $886,953 was assessed. Assuming that courts generally receive payments totaling 60 percent of the court fines and costs that have been assessed against minors within a given year, it is anticipated that the fiscal impact as a result of the proposal will be a reduction of revenues of approximately $532,172.
